四、閱讀測驗(共 0 分,每題 0 分)

1. The next time you're on the MRT or a city bus, look up. You might be very surprised to see how many people are looking down at their phones. A 2017 survey in the UK found that 38 percent of adults thought they were on their phones too often. In addition, nearly 80 percent of people, the survey found, check their apps within an hour of falling asleep at night. Also, 55 percent of people do the same within 15 minutes of waking up in the morning. This, research has shown, can be bad for our mental health.

So, if you're one of those who use their phone too much, what can you do? Well, there are a number of apps that can help. For example, "Mute" helps you to see how often you unlock your phone, and how long you use it for. Another app, "Hold," makes a game out of reducing your smartphone use. Users who can stay off their phone can earn points. These points can then be redeemed for things like movie tickets. Beyond this, there are other steps you can take to stay away from your smartphone. For starters, try to unload your most used apps. Also, try to remember that there was a time when phones were simply used for making and receiving calls.

2. People spend a lot of time playing games on smartphones, but what types of games are people playing? Brain puzzle games are the most popular in 2018. The second are matching games, such as Candy Crush. Actually, different kinds of people tend to play different types of games. For example, women prefer matching games, and young men are more likely to play alternate reality games (ARG), such as Pokémon GO. However, some games, such as brain puzzle games, are popular with both men and women. How about the play time? It sounds crazy, but people play games during almost every hour of a day. At about three o'clock in the afternoon, you can find the most players. That is not a good thing because most adults and students should be working or taking a class at that time.
