六、閱讀測驗

1. Technology has greatly changed the way we communicate with friends. Nowadays, many people are unable to leave their smartphones alone. They are constantly chatting and sending texts on their phone. However, in the days before there were social networking sites, people didn't have these options. Going back in time further, people had neither feature phones nor telephones, so the only way to keep in touch with friends was through letters. Many people had pen pals—friends that they wrote to in faraway places and rarely meet in person.

If you have ever received a letter from a friend, then you know there is something satisfying about finding a letter in your mailbox. Imagine the joy of carefully opening the envelope, taking out the letter inside, and reading the handwritten text in the letter. Believe it or not, most pen pals take great pride in their neat and beautiful handwriting.

Although e-mails and social networking apps have pretty much replaced letter writing now, some people still have traditional pen pals. When it comes to making someone feel special, it's hard to beat sending them a letter the old-fashioned way. It requires more effort than writing an e-mail or a message, but it's definitely worth it.

- (1) () What is the passage mainly about?
- (A) The introduction of an old-fashioned way of communication.
