五、閱讀測驗

1. The Tao tribe of Taiwan lives on Orchid Island. Seafood is the Tao people's main source of food, and the fish they catch play an important role in their culture.

The Tao people have many beliefs and traditions, and many of them are related to the sea or fish. For example, the qualities of the fish are divided into three kinds, and men, women, and the elderly are only allowed to eat specific kinds of fish. The best quality fish can be eaten by everyone, but they are saved mainly for women and children. Fish that are of lower quality can only be served to men, and fish that are darker in color and stronger in taste can only be served to older men. What's more, objects such as oranges are considered bad luck because they sound like "catching no fish" in Tao language. Pregnant women are also not allowed to come near the boats in order to pray for good luck.

As you can see, natural surroundings and diets have great influences on culture. The life of the Tao people is closely related to the sea and fish, and they have passed down many traditions and beliefs regarding this.
